INTRODUCTION

by
Mildred Fitts Pyle

1277584
The history of the western gold rush, is, in a very real sense, also the history of the City of Stockton, California, now one of the world's great inland ports where ships of the seven seas load and unload varied cargoes at her many wharves.

In 1847, Stockton, (then called Tuleberg) , newly birthed from the brain of its young founder, Charles M. Weber, consisted of a motley group of huts and cabins clustered about the waterfront where boats from the little village of Yerba Buena (now San Francisco) brought occasional supplies and more occasional travelers up the San Joaquin River to the valley. During this year, 1847, possibly twenty families were persuaded to settle in the proposed town. Then, in January 1848, in the hills east of Sutter's Fort, John Marshall made his historic discovery of gold.

Early spring of 1849 saw the beginning of the Year of the Argonauts as, from all states and all nations, came men of all breeds and all intents. In their race for gold, their eagerness to lay rapacious fingers upon the heart of the golden hills, the adventurous and the foolish poured through the startled community as through a funnel, pausing only for such necessary supplies as were obtainable. As if by magic then, the place became a city of tents where the prudent and wise as well as the wily, set up businesses offering, at exorbitant prices, goods, services and amusements.

Lawful and lawless alike prospered to an unheard of degree, for to the small settlement, overwhelmed by this great influx, law arrived a little late and free enterprise enjoyed such complete freedom as to, in countless cases, subvert the ordinarily honest and make the dishonest so wealthy he could no longer afford to be anything but respectable. In this first year of the Gold Rush were laid foundations for more than one of the great fortunes of the west.

Christmas morning of that year, 1849, the glutted, brawling, adolescent city lay in ashes, but the spring of 1850 found her largely rebuilt with better, more permanent structures and before that year was out, men of integrity and foresight had forced the incorporation of the City of Stockton, the election of city officers and the formation of some semblance of law and order. Churches and schools were established, doctors and lawyers opened offices, stages and multi-teamed freighters left daily for the mining areas, and the Central Exchange, where the first piano to be brought to the valley cast its carefree cacophony upon the astonished night, offered elegant entertainment along with the chance to win or lose a fortune on the turn of the wheel or card.

THE HISTORY OF

THE CITY OF

The history of the city of London, from its first settlement to the present time, is a subject of great interest and importance. It is a subject which has attracted the attention of many writers, and which has been the subject of many valuable works.

In 1847, Edward, (then called Edward), nearly finished from the ruins of the great tower, which had been destroyed by a fire which broke out in the year 1666. The tower was one of the most important buildings in the city, and its destruction was a great loss to the city. The tower was built by Henry II, and it was one of the most important buildings in the city. The tower was destroyed by a fire which broke out in the year 1666. The tower was one of the most important buildings in the city, and its destruction was a great loss to the city.

Early after the year 1666, the rebuilding of the tower of the city of London, from its ruins, and all the other buildings which had been destroyed by the fire, was a great task. The rebuilding of the tower of the city of London, from its ruins, and all the other buildings which had been destroyed by the fire, was a great task. The rebuilding of the tower of the city of London, from its ruins, and all the other buildings which had been destroyed by the fire, was a great task.

London and London were the two most important cities in the world. They were the two most important cities in the world. They were the two most important cities in the world. They were the two most important cities in the world. They were the two most important cities in the world.

London was the most important city in the world. It was the most important city in the world. It was the most important city in the world. It was the most important city in the world. It was the most important city in the world.

By now the river was aswarm with shipping, the valley dotted with small communities set up as stage-stops or taverns, and the Sierra aring with the raucous life of a thousand mining camps, some of whose names have been immortalized in the writings of Brete Harte and Mark Twain. Many of these places yet remain, but countless of them have eroded into the patient dust as time seeks to cover, a little more with each spring's growth, the naked, ravaged breasts of these western hills.

The early newspapers, as is usual, were violently partisan in their political views, their owners on more than one occasion defending their convictions with dueling pistols, which sometimes resulted in a change of both publisher and policy. In these statistics, culled from their pages, the reader will discover the fleshless bones of many a macabre happening and will realize that violent death was, in Gold Rush days, as swift as a singing bullet; as sudden as the flash of a dirk in the dark; as close as a man's own shadow at high noon.

We owe a debt of gratitude to those publishers, men of great courage, whatever their politics, who recorded these precious items to be found nowhere else. Also to the librarians who have sought out and preserved them, that we may use them to get a clearer view of the exciting past. We also express our thanks to the local reference librarians who provided us the opportunity for copying these items, the members of El Toyon Chapter of the D.A.R., who started us on this project by lending us the notes that they had taken several years ago. Our thanks also go to those of our own members who did the necessary work as a labor of love, or assisted with their encouragement and suggestions. We hope these records will not only help researchers in their never ending search for truth, but will also give pleasure to those people whose families helped lay the foundations for our present city.
